

Darius Morris
Senior Accountant
Capital Area Workforce Development

Darius began employment with Wake County Government in May 1982. He was hired as the Accounting Technician for the Capital Area Federal Workforce Development program. At the time, the federal program was referred to as the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act (CETA). Now, 38 years later, Darius is the Senior Accountant and Business Manager for the Capital Area federal workforce development program, which is referred to as the Workforce Innovation and Opportunity Act (WIOA).

For the past 25 years, Darius has ensured that the department had zero annual audit findings and zero findings for state monitoring. Darius is commonly requested to mentor other financial workforce professionals from around the state because of his reputation and his knowledge in financial management for federal and state programs.

He is also recognized at the Federal Level at the Department of Labor for his knowledge and he has been asked to participate in conversations that are typically geared towards state level financial leaders.

Darius is an important part of the Capital Area Workforce Development department. The team is small, and Darius is a critical part of the nucleus. His sense of humor and his stories will be missed tremendously by his co-workers.

Please join in me congratulating Darius on his retirement.
